As you enjoy this evening’s performance of Gaetano Donizetti’s The Daughter of the Regiment, please take a moment to look around at the awesome wonder that is the Musical Arts Center. Its offerings drive the cultural life of a broad geographic region—inspiring an appreciation, understanding, and love for the arts while laying the foundation for countless international musical careers, giving inspiration to many artists who actively build cultural communities around the world.

The realization of the wonder of this environment is thanks to the hard work and foresight of many individuals under the leadership of then-Jacobs School of Music dean Wilfred C. Bain. Standing prominently among them is Ted Jones, professor emeritus of the IU Jacobs School of Music. It was Ted who drew the first plans for the MAC, in 1958, after extensively researching the most eminent opera houses in the United States and abroad. His influence on it has set the facility apart from its peers, ensuring that its functionality and infinite potential define it as a one-of-a-kind facility—limited only by the imagination and creativity of those who cross its threshold.

As a part of For All: The Indiana University Bicentennial Campaign, Ted established an endowment to name the executive director of production position at the Musical Arts Center, an act that would forever link him to a place to which he is so inextricably connected.

“Ted Jones’ gift is remarkable, a reflection of his love for production in the Musical Arts Center and the people who make it possible,” said Gwyn Richards, Jacobs School of Music David Henry Jacobs Bicentennial Dean. “Now the executive director position will bear his name, a reminder to us all of the role Ted himself played in developing what we now take for granted, the magic that occurs nightly in the Musical Arts Center.”

“Ted Jones’ endowment of this directorship goes beyond the incredible generosity of the gift itself,” said Timothy Stebbins, the first Ted Jones Executive Director of Production. “For this investment to come from someone who not only served the Jacobs School as a faculty member, but was also on the forefront of the development and evolution of the Musical Arts Center, underscores the importance of Ted’s legacy. It also allows us to honor his tremendous contribution to our field.”

Tonight, please join us in thanking Ted Jones, whose act of philanthropy—and sheer love of and dedication to the performing arts—will forever be connected to the Musical Arts Center.

Synopsis

Time: The Napoleonic Wars, early nineteenth century
Place: The Swiss Tyrol

Act I

The Marquise of Berkenfield is traveling in the Tyrols with her companion Hortensius. There is fighting all around and she fears, as do the villagers in nearby towns, for their lives. But all rejoice as it seems the French army is retreating. Alas, war is a terrible thing to endure for a lady of such standing as herself, sings the Marquise. Suddenly, who should appear but Sergeant Sulpice of the Twenty-First Regiment of the French army, who, although the villagers and the Marquise are alarmed, assures them that the French army shall restore peace and order to the region.

Marie, the canteen girl and beloved mascot of the regiment enters. Sulpice, whom she claims as one of her adopted fathers, is pleased to see her but concerned because she has been seen with a young man whom she identifies as Tonio, a young Tyrolean. At that moment, Tonio is brought in as a prisoner of the soldiers who have captured him prowling around the camp. The soldiers call for his death, but Marie saves him by explaining that he had saved her life when she fell while mountain climbing. The soldiers all rejoice and congratulate Tonio, who pledges allegiance to France as Marie sings the regimental song. Sulpice leads his soldiers and Tonio off, but Tonio breaks away and returns to Marie, who tells him that if she is to be with him she must have the approval of her adopted fathers...the entire regiment. After all, she says, it was the regiment that found her on the battlefield as a baby and adopted and cared for her during her childhood. While at first skeptical of Tonio's intentions, the young couple nonetheless express their love for each other.

Sulpice meets the Marquise and Hortensius and upon hearing the name Berkenfield, recognizes it from a letter found with Marie as an infant. It is determined that she is Marie's long-lost aunt, who now insists upon taking Marie home with her to be raised as a "proper lady." As Marie is preparing to leave with her aunt, Tonio arrives, having enlisted in the regiment and proclaiming his love for Marie and his intentions to marry her. The regiment informs him that she is leaving, and Tonio becomes enraged.

Act II

Marie has been living in the Marquise's castle for several months. In a conversation with Sulpice, the Marquise describes how she has been grooming Marie to marry her nephew, the Duke of Crakentorp. The Marquise asks Sulpice to help Marie accept her fate, and ultimately Marie agrees to the marriage.

Marie is reconciled to her fate, when, unexpectedly, the regiment arrives with Tonio, now an officer. All are joyfully reunited, when the horrified Marquise enters. Tonio asks for Marie's hand in marriage, as he has risked his life to join the regiment so they can be together. The Marquise scornfully rebukes him, and all leave saddened by her refusal to allow the marriage. It is when Sulpice is alone with the Marquise that the truth is revealed: Marie is actually the illegitimate daughter of the Marquise. Learning this, Sulpice agrees that Marie must obey her mother's wishes and marry the Duke of Crakentorp.

The Duchess of Crakentorp and her nephew arrive, and Marie enters with Sulpice. Marie, knowing now about the Marquise, embraces her and decides she must obey. But at the last minute the soldiers of the Regiment rush in and sing about how their little daughter needs their help. They sing of how war threw into their arms a baby whom they all love and care for as fathers. When it is revealed that she was a canteen girl, the Duchess becomes enraged and leaves as Marie in turn sings about her debt to the regiment. The Marquise is moved deeply, admits to all that she is the mother of Marie, and consents to her marriage to Tonio.

Program Notes

“Donizetti, Paris, and La Fille du Régiment
(The Daughter of the Regiment)”

by Kirby Haugland
(Musicology Ph.D. Student)

Gaetano Donizetti arrived in Paris in 1838, freed from a stifling life in Naples. His latest compositions had been censored by the king, he had failed to receive an expected appointment as director of the Naples Conservatory, and he was still reeling from the loss of his wife and newborn child little more than a year before. Paris offered him greater freedom and new commissions from its many opera companies. The Théâtre-Italien welcomed Lucia di Lammermoor into its repertoire in December 1837, and multiple contracts awaited Donizetti when he arrived the following year. After La Fille du Régiment premiered at the Opéra-Comique on February 14, 1840, composer and critic Hector Berlioz wrote a scathing—and partially libelous—review, complaining that Donizetti had two commissions with the Opéra, two with the Théâtre de la Renaissance, two with the Opéra-Comique, and another with the Théâtre-Italien. Berlioz raged that “One can no longer speak of the opera houses of Paris, but only of the opera houses of M. Donizetti.” Although reviews were mixed because of the absurd plot and a poor performance from the original Tonio, Mécène Marié de l’Isle, the opera quickly gained popularity, with 50 performances in its first year and 1,000 from the Opéra-Comique alone by 1914. Its success derives in part from a perfect mix of Donizetti’s Italian style and the opéra-comique idiom.

The libretto includes a number of common tropes from Italian opera buffa that should be recognizable to audience members: the blustering military officer and his troops, the aristocrat and her servant, a music lesson, the revelation of family ties, and lovers separated and united. Other details, such as the plot’s Napoleonic setting of French-occupied Austria and its unabashedly patriotic finale “Salut à la France!” would never have appeared in an Italian opera. When the opera became La Figlia del Reggimento for Italian performance, not only were French details purged for the censors, but Donizetti also had to compose recitatives to replace the opéra-comique’s spoken dialogue.

La Fille uses standard opéra-comique forms and also contains several references to wider Parisian musical culture. The Marquise’s early aria “Pour une femme de mon nom” is a couplet (literally “verse”), a strophic song with refrain. The raucous Act II trio, “Tous les trois réunis,” in which Sulpice, Marie, and Tonio pass pattering notes amongst one another, was likely influenced by a similar trio in Ferdinand Hérald’s popular Le Pré aux Clercs—a connection that critics of the time were frequent to note. The Act II music lesson may remind some audience members of last year’s production of The Barber of Seville, which also includes a web of humorous references. The Marquise attributes Marie’s air du salon to “Garat, un petit chanteur français.” This “small French singer” is actually Pierre Garat, a famed eighteenth-century tenor and composer, and the teacher of the original Marquise, Marie-Julie Boulanger. Sulpice’s frustration with the sickly sweet parlor song makes him break into an imitation drum beat, the “rataplan” heard in his earlier duet with Marie, “Au bruit de la guerre,” and the regiment’s “Rataplan” chorus. Donizetti and his librettists may have been inspired by the soldiers in Giacomo Meyerbeer’s 1836 grand opera Les Huguenots, who also sing this onomatopoeia. Tonio’s bravura double aria, “Ah! mes amis, quell jour de fête. . . Pour mon âme quell destin!,” sung to earn the regiment’s approval of his love for Marie, calls for eight high C’s punched out on the part of the tenor. This aria helped make Luciano Pavarotti famous in the 1960s, but the style has its origins with tenor Gilbert-Louis Duprez, one of the stars of the Paris Opéra, whose ut en poitrine or “chest voice C” would transform the sound of romantic tenors.

Perhaps the opera’s most engrossing tune is the regimental song “Chacun le sait,” which appears first in the overture before Marie sings it to her comrades in Act I. The march-like verse alternates with a rolling triple-time refrain, lending the effect of a joyous drinking song praising the exploits of the regiment, on and off the battlefield. Surprisingly, the music for the verse actually comes from an aria in Donizetti’s 1830 oratorio on the biblical flood, Il Diluvio Universale, in which Noah contrasts the salvation of the just man with the suffering of the wicked. The melody’s jaunty reimagining for La Fille is a shocking transformation, although a few early audience members might still have recognized it from a Théâtre-Italien production of the original azione tragica-sacra in 1837.

In La Fille, Donizetti manages to absorb the essence of French opera and transform it with his personal touch. His unquestionable success has kept the opera vibrant and entertaining for nearly two centuries.

Over the years, she worked with a number of well-known singers, including Samuel Ramey, Justino Díaz, Carol Vaness, Wolfgang Brendel, June Anderson, Gianna Rolandi, and Jerry Hadley. The conductors, coaches, and stage directors with whom she has worked include Otto Guth, Max Rudolf, Edoardo Müller, David Effron, Arthur Fagen, Anthony Pappano, Anthony Manoli, Terry Lusk, Dino Yannopoulos, Tito Capobianco, Andrei Șerban, John Cox, and John Copley. At New father, Siena arrived in the United States at age seven. She received a B.A. from Sarah Lawrence College and, in her twenties, worked for two years in Italy as secretary to the president of the Olivetti Company. Many years later, she continued her education, earned a master’s degree, and became licensed as a psychotherapist by the state of California, where she practiced for 15 years. The mother of two grown children, she moved to Bloomington to be near her son, who lives here with his wife and two young daughters.
